Sirs -

I find it inconceivable that the recommendations of the (thorough and expensive) Leveson report should be used as a method to kick the matter of genuinely independent press regulation into the political long grass.

May I urge you to implement the recommendation for a truly independent regulator with teeth before we have to go through the whole wasteful process again following the next time the press exceeds acceptable public limits.

The continued failure to apply Leveson's recommendations adds to our distrust of both politicians and Parliament and of the consultation process itself.

Yours

Anthony Baumann
