

Dear Sir,

I believe that the continuing prevarication by the British Government and obfuscation and avoidance by the British Press of the public acceptance of the Leveson proposals is a demonstration of the failing democracy in the United Kingdom.

For four years the Leveson proposals accepted by Parliament have been treated with contempt by our elected representatives and have languished apparently in the belief by the Government that their friends in the Press will escape scrutiny and reaction from Press victims. This tacit collusion continues to disgust the many electors who have lost faith in the integrity of Government and the efficacy of actions that are proposed following extensive enquiries into situations that demand corrective action.

It appears to many electors that our politicians, businesses and the Media are in collusion to deny and emasculate any legislation that remotely affects their mutual "backscratching".

Please ensure that the PRP report states that IMPRESS is being avoided and rejected by the Government and the Press and that the British Public requires them to discontinue their "cosy" relationships and enact effectively the Leveson recommendations that have been avoided for so long.

Yours faithfully,

G. R. Wilkes.
