

I am writing to comment on the current state of press regulation. It can only be described as a shambles. The media have gone back to their old excesses - and no one is policing them. On a regular basis they are getting away with the most inaccurate, dishonest reporting and are continuing to harass people knowing that there is no one and no body that is going to control them. Parliament seems to have walked away from its commitments and promises and it is about time that the Leveson measures were properly introduced - as politicians of all parties signed up to do. Where is the right of reply? Where are the corrections we should be seeing? Where are the judgments for wrongdoing? Where is anybody or any organisation to be seen instilling discipline and regulation and giving confidence? Nowhere - the situation is a joke and we are stumbling back towards the intolerable mess we had before.

Yours sincerely

Martin Helm
