

I watch with dismay as the Leveson Report is being effectively bypassed and ignored. The interests of ordinary law abiding citizens are being ignored in favour of the newspaper business which has proved time and time again that it is unwilling and incapable of regulating itself. We regulate a morally responsible and independent organisation like the BBC so at a minimum the same should apply to the newspapers. We must also ensure that when the ordinary 'man in the street' is wronged by the newspaper business that they do not fight back alone; society and our systems must be there to fully support them.

P Scallon