While I fully accept that you are not wholly responsible for the failure of the press to accept approved regulation, overall it is still an abject failure.

Being part of a system that has failed is hardly a credit and the inability to persuade the press of the value of your role, lets down the people who most needed honesty and a low cost arbitration system.

As more people use the internet for news, the printed press plays a less influential role which is sad as they are more accountable than the web albeit unregulated.

This is the age of information and we very much need the best quality information to determine our future.
