

Dear Sir / Madam,

I write as an admirer and supporter of genuine investigative journalism, but I despise the excesses of the gutter press. Shameful conduct has continued to this day.

I urge the panel to recommend to the government the implementation of ALL the provisions of the Leveson Enquiry forthwith.

I believe that David Cameron has reneged upon his promise to do this.

The present situation where the press claim that they will regulate themselves is thoroughly inadequate; it is not effective and it never will be. It is no more satisfactory than it would be to allow louts to police public order, or paedophiles to investigate, and determine the punishments for, offences of indecency with children.

Yours Sincerely,

Andrew Sharp
