

A learned judge was appointed by a democratically elected government to independently advise on press regulation. He came to an extremely well advised and thorough conclusion with extensive and yet also specific rules of modality for future conduct of the press and media. But certain press interests, for which probably read 'Moguls', refuse to accept the wishes of the Public and one wonders why.

In past years events have shown how utterly false stories, lies invented by bored journalists at the behest of the wishes of editors and owners, have been foisted on the Public without any realistic right of redress. In any case, once a smear has been spread, the damage is done.

Press barons want to retain status quo to maintain their power over events and people.

I have had enough of Murdoch and Dacre wielding unbridled control over others and telling me how to live my life.

Let everybody obey the rule of law and the wishes of the majority.

Frank Mugford